

Medieval Snakes and Ladders

Play your way through the history of St Audoen's Church

The history of snakes and ladders

The game of Snakes and Ladders was played over 1000 years ago in India. The ladders represented virtue, speeding your journey to heaven. The snakes were people's vices, leading down to cycles of re-birth. The dice represented fate and destiny. There were more snakes than ladders, reminding people that the path to heaven is the more challenging one.

In this game of Snakes and ladders, we follow the ups and downs of the medieval community around St Audoen's church in Dublin as it evolved. The ladders represent the improvements in the lives of Dubliners. The snakes represent their set backs. Once again, the dice represents fate.

St Audoen's Church

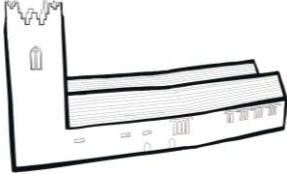

St Audoen's church was founded in 1190, just 20 years after the arrival of the Normans in Dublin. It played a central role in the social, religious and economic life of Dubliners. The success of the Normans in Ireland relied on creating a strong colonial community, where every new Norman could be integrated into the existing community. Religion was an important glue that held the Norman colony together. St Audoen's, with its links across the wider Norman world, was well placed to provide that bond.

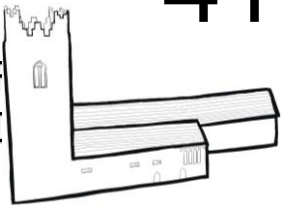

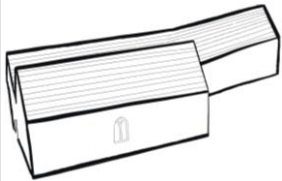

How to assemble the game

Cut out the two boards and stick them together so that the two arrows match.
Each player needs a game piece; you can use stones.
You will also need a dice.

How to play

Starting with the youngest player, each person shakes the dice and moves in the direction and sequence of the numbers. If you land on a ladder, you move up to the square at the top of the ladder.
If you land on a snake you move down to the square at the bottom of the snake.
The first person to reach number 84 wins.

1882 84 St Audoen's buildings were handed over to the state.	 83	82	1829 81 Catholic Emancipation Act	80	79	1820 78 The roof was removed from the South Nave.
71	1758 72 Wide Streets Commission established to improve Dublin streetscape.	1773 73 The roof of the east end of the church was removed.	 74	1801 75 The Act of Union between Great Britain and Ireland.	76	77
1690 70 Catholics are no longer allowed to be officers of St Anne's Guild.	69	68	1667 67 Storm damages St Audoen's tower.	66	1650 65 Plague arrives in Dublin.	1649 64 Cromwell arrives in Ireland.
1597 57 Famine sweeps the city of Dublin.	1597 58 St Anne's Guild pays for repairs to St Audoen's tower	59	1598 60 Increased taxation during the 9 year war.	61	1611 62 Catholic worship no longer permitted in St Audoen's.	63
1597 56 Gunpowder explosion on the quays damages St Audoen's tower.	55	1540s 54 Reformation enforced in Ireland.	1534 53 Silken Thomas' rebellion against the English starts in Dublin.	52	1506 51 Guildhall for Carpenters established at St Audoen's.	 50
43	1430 44 St Anne's Guild established.	 45 St Anne's Guild Seal	46	47	48  Portlester cenotaph	1480 49 Portlester Chantry added to St Audoen's church.

1423 42 3 new bells cast for St Audoens and the western tower built	41   	1350 40 St Audoen's north chancel is added   	39	1348 38 Plague arrives in Dublin.	37	36
29	1314 30 Famine sweeps through Dublin	31	32	1317 33 Bruce Invasion prompts fires in west Dublin.	34	35
28	27	1260 26 Pillory installed in Castle Street	1260 25 Larger boats are now able to dock at a new stone quay wall	24	1250 23 Dublin now has a public water and sewage system.	22
c. 1228 15   Dublin Castle towers are built. 	16	1229 17 Freemen of Dublin elect their first Mayor.	1240 18 St Audoen's gate and city wall built.   	19	20   	c. 1240 21 St Audoen's church doubles in size due to increased number of parishioners
14	1221 13 Toll gates are introduced to help pay for city walls.	12	1209 11 Black Monday; 500 Normans were killed by Gaelic clans	10	9	8
1170 1 The Normans capture Dublin	2   Strongbow 	1171 3   Henry II arrived in Dublin 	4	1188 5 Newgate Prison opens	  Romanesque Door St Audoen's Church  6	1190 7 St Audoen's church established

The Story of St Audoen's church, the longest serving parish church in Dublin.

Stroll along Dublin's High Street on Sunday morning and listen to the bells of St Audoen's. You will be listening to the same bells that have pealed in St Audoen's since 1423.

A new Church for a new Norman colony

St Audoen's church was built in 1190, just as the Norman colony in Dublin was established. King Henry II had arrived in Dublin less than 20 years earlier and his descendants would go on to rule Ireland for the next 800 years. Henry II granted Dublin to the men of Bristol with the instruction that they establish a colony as if this were unoccupied land. They built St Audoen's and named the church after St Ouen, a French saint that had a large following in the Norman world.

St Audoen's Church brings the new colony together

Within 70 years of the founding of St Audoen's, the church had cemented its status as a core part of Dublin life. Many wealthy Dubliners built homes around the church, connecting the parish to the power base at Dublin Corporation and Dublin Castle. During that time, the north nave was constructed, doubling the size of the church. The population of the city continued to grow, as did its dedication to St Audoen's. Side chapels were installed to accommodate devotion to particular saints. Religion provided a system of shared beliefs that was important in building trust between the founding Normans and the waves of new arrivals in the following years as the colony expanded. Dublin continued to grow under the watchful eye of Dublin Castle. The walls were fortified further and St Audoen's Arch was completed by 1240, allowing merchants to access their warehouses at the quays.

The Guilds of Dublin

St Audoen's also had strong links to the guilds in Dublin and many guild members donated generously to the church. The Tanners Guild met in the church tower and the Bakers Guild occupied an adjoining building. The Merchants Guild was the most important guild; its members held positions of power in the city during the week and attended services in St Audoen's on Sundays and holy days.

By 1310, St Audoen's Church was settled and prosperous. Donations continued to flood into the parish and these funded a new north chancel. Church rituals were becoming increasingly elaborate. By moving the altar into the new north chancel, they maintained a sense of distance between the clergy and the congregation. This also increased the dignity and sense of mystery of the ceremonies. Burial within the church was popular with wealthier parishioners.

Famine, invasion and plague

But the church was also facing into extremely challenging times. In 1314, famine struck. In 1317, facing the threat of the Scottish Bruce invasion, the western suburbs of the city were set alight, fires that must have felt very close to St Audoen's. But the biggest challenge came in 1348, when plague arrived on a boat from France. Over 2 years, it killed half the population of Dublin. Priests visiting the sick soon followed parishioners into the grave. Plague returned again in 1360, 1370, 1383, 1390 and 1398. Dublin struggled to recover, as people lived their lives close to death.

St Anne's Guild

In the face of adversity, the parishioners of St Audoen's came together to form St Anne's Guild in 1430. They believed that before their souls could ascend to heaven, they spent time in purgatory so that they could be purified. Masses sung or said for people after death could speed up this journey through purgatory and into heaven. Supported by a Royal Charter, the guild accepted donations and accumulated a substantial portfolio of properties. Income from these properties funded six chaplains and six altars within St Audoen's. Sir Robert Dowdall, a knight, gave a gift of 100 marks (about £66) to be invested and the income used to support two priests who were to pray for him after his death. He believed that these prayers would speed his journey to heaven. Richard Talbot, merchant, bestowed properties to St Anne's Guild on condition that guild chaplains on the Saturday before the feast of St Barnabas walk around Dublin ringing a bell and announcing the anniversary of his death and the following day sing mass for his soul.

St Anne's Guild Seal

Donations to St Audoen's continued throughout the 15th century, as Dublin began to look forward to better times. Almost every corner of the church was occupied by devotional altars to different saints. In 1423, three new bells were cast for St Audoen's church. These three bells still ring out every Sunday to this day, accompanied by three additional bells. The bells were located in the newly built western tower.

Rolandus Filzeus, lince de Portlesler natus obiit die Decembris 19. et 14. 1496
et Margarita eius uxor

The Reformation divides the parish of St Audoen's

St Audoens managed to continue to serve both religious communities in the church, thanks to its integration into the social and economic life of the wealthy and elite in Dublin. However, by 1611, Catholic worship was outlawed in the church. Catholics continued to meet in St Audoen's college on the site of the Catholic St Audoen's church today.

St Anne's guild continued to play an important part in the life of St Audoen's church. However, from the 1630s there was a concerted effort by the state religion to seize the assets of St Anne's guild. There was suspicion that the guild was using its resources to promote and protect the Catholic church, especially as there existed a Papal Bull dating to 1569, saying that the resources of the Catholic lay guilds should be applied only to Catholics. This attack on the guild failed, but it was not the last one. From 1690, as part of the penal laws, Catholics were forbidden from becoming officers of the guild, but could remain as members. The guild survived until at least 1740 and was one of the few religious institutions that had both Catholic and Protestant members.

Throughout all these difficulties, St Audoen's church continued as a parish church for the protestant Church of Ireland parishioners. It remained a popular place for burial. Fees for maintaining the graves within the church continued to be paid into the 20th century. However, the church had begun a period of decline. As the number of parishioners fell, the finances came under strain. In 1777, the east side of the chapel was unroofed to reduce the cost of maintaining the building. In 1820, the south nave was also unroofed. Church of Ireland services are now restricted to the north nave.

A new chapter in St Audoen's history opened in 1882, when all but the north nave was handed over to the state. The south nave was re-roofed and now houses a heritage centre that tells the unique history of the longest serving parish church in Dublin. When you hear the church bells ringing out on Sunday morning, think of Margaret Bell, Richard Talbot and Roland FitzEustace who shared that moment with you so many years ago.

Gothic arches of the unroofed chancel at St Audoen's Church

Check out St Audoen's opening hours:

<https://heritageireland.ie/places-to-visit/st-audoens-church/>

Cheat Sheet

Impress your guide when you visit St Audoen's church!

Altar: a type of table used in church services

Catholic: a member of the Roman Catholic Church, who continued to follow the Pope in Rome after the reformation

Cenotaph: a monument to someone buried elsewhere

Chancel: the part of the church containing the altar and seats for the clergy

Chantry: an endowment for a priest to celebrate masses for the soul of the founder

Clergy: a body of people ordained for religious duties in the Christian churches

Endowed: to give or bequeath income or property for a purpose

Guild: medieval association of people pursuing a common goal

Nave: the central part of the church where the congregation sit. In medieval churches, it was separated from the chancel by a screen, step or rail.

Papal Bull: a public decree issued by the pope in Rome

Parish: a small administrative district having it's own church and priest

Parishioner: a person living in in a particular parish, usually a regular churchgoer

Plague or Bubonic plague: a contagious bacterial disease usually causing fever, delirium and often causing death. There were no medical treatments for plague in medieval times.

Protestant: a member of the Christian churches that separated from the Roman Catholic Church during the Reformation

Purgatory: a place where the souls of the dead waited for purification before entering heaven

Reformation: a 16th century movement for the reform of the abuses in the Catholic Church that ended in the establishment of Protestant churches